Center for Tomorrow

Distinguished Keynote Speaker:

Stéphane Dandeneau,
Université du Québec à Montréal

The Psychology GSA—in collaboration with the Neuroscience GSA, Communication GSA, Philosophy GSA, Occupational Therapy GSA, Linguistics GSA, the Counseling, School, and Educational Psychology GSA, and the Department of Psychology—will host an interdisciplinary symposium to showcase student research relevant to the fields of behavior and brain sciences. With support from the Graduate Student Association (GSA) and Subboard I, Inc. (SBI), the event will provide students from various fields an opportunity to share their work and to network with students from other departments.

In addition to showcasing a wide array of student posters and oral presentations, the symposium will also feature a research talk from our distinguished keynote speaker, Stéphane Dandeneau. An associate professor at the Université du Québec à Montréal, Stéphane has served key roles on a diverse range of projects throughout his career, including his work with MindHabits, Inc. in association with McGill University, and the Roots of Resilience Project at the Jewish General Hospital’s Culture and Mental Health Research Unit in Montreal. His research spans the fields of social, cultural, clinical, and cognitive psychology, focusing specifically on the social cognitive processes underlying stress and resilience.

The symposium is open to all UB graduate students and will be held from 2:00 – 5:00pm on June 1st in the Center for Tomorrow. There will be an open bar, as well as hors d’oeuvres.

Students in the behavioral, neurological, and social sciences are strongly encouraged to present. If interested, please submit a brief abstract (500 word max), as well as the BBSS Submission form to bbss.symposium@gmail.com by May 8th. If you need a copy of the submission form, please contact us directly via email. Further questions about submissions and/or attendance are welcomed.
